|III. Game Introduction|

+~~~~~+

"In Nobunaga's Ambition II, you embark on an epic quest to unify Japan. As a Daimyo (warlord) vying for power and territory, you'll command vast armies of Samurai (warriors); defend yourself against ninja assassins; lay siege against mighty fortresses; negotiate alliances; and confront your enemies in deadly combat.

But in order to conquer Japan, you must be vigilant with internal affairs as well as in war. To keep your vassals content, and thus avoid being overthrown, you'll reclaim farmland, build water works, expand towns and attract merchants. And when emergencies such as typhoons, epidemics or famine arise, you'll have to react quickly to rescue your people, or lace their rebellion!" {1}

A note about names: being an historically-based strategy game, the names of daimyo and samurai are in the traditional Japanese format of family name then given name. Instead of John Doe, which is in the western format of first (given) name then last (family) name, the name is Doe John. This format is why you will see many names that "begin" the same - many daimyos have family members (sons, brothers, uncles, etc.) under their command.

|V. Diplomacy for Dummies|

Diplomacy is a funny thing in that it can be very useful, yet is completely optional. You can successfully navigate the entire game without using a single diplomatic option. As alliances are non-binding (meaning your allies can turn around and attack you at will - though others will no longer trust them if they do), I see them as little more than a waste of Body Points that could be put to better use elsewhere.

Marriages don't increase your odds of creating successors, so they aren't much good either...unless someone is paying you 50G for a princess, then it's worthwhile. Tribute (paid to you) is also good in that way. If you don't need the money and/or want another samurai, capture and recruit the messengers. Killing the messengers doesn't do much good, unless they're incompetent samurai that wouldn't have any real purpose in your army beyond being errand-boys. Threatening your enemies, on the other hand, could be a quick and easy way to expand, if you've got the military might to back up your threat.

This is a brief breakdown of the diplomacy menu options and their costs:

6. Diplomacy: Refusing offers of diplomacy from other lords causes their friendship level to drop by 5 points. Capturing the messenger (to kill or recruit) will also drop the friendship level by 5. A high POL score would be beneficial for all of these actions.

1. Marriage: 130BP, 50G. You offer to marry a princess from another daimyo's family. You may marry into as many family clans as will have you. This will raise your friendship level with that daimyo by 20.
2. Alliance: 100BP. Begins a 12-month non-binding treaty with another daimyo that raises your friendship level by 10. An alliance is not a guarantee that you will not be attacked, nor does it prevent you from attacking, but breaking an alliance will cause you to lose the trust and respect of other lords, and your friendship levels will drop accordingly.
3. Threaten: 130BP. This is an interesting option, one that allows for bloodless conquest. Threatening another daimyo, if you are strong enough to intimidate him, may cause him to try to appease you with Tribute (buy your friendship) or even a princess. If you are convincingly superior, and have the military might to wipe him off the map, he may submit to your rule completely, and you will gain control of all of his fiefs and samurai (who may or may not be pleased with the new arrangements).
4. Tribute: BP 80, variable G. Use this to try to buy a daimyo's friendship. The amount of the increase in friendship level depends upon the size of the monetary gift.

|The Status Screen|

Let's start at the top, though this part is pretty self-explanatory. On the right, you see the current month, year, season, and the current market price for food. In the middle you have a picture of your daimyo's flag, the number and name of the fief, your daimyo's family name, and the governor's full name. On the left is a picture of the governor.

The mid-left of the screen is where you find the specifics of your fief's current status. Let's go into what each of those little pictures and the numbers with them mean. I've listed each item by the title for each value followed by [] surrounding my attempts to describe the pictures.

Gold: [The shiny gold coin with the $ in the middle.] This is the amount of money in the treasury. You gain more gold every March from taxes (less annual stipends for each samurai). Gold is required for many actions. Maximum of 999.

Food: [The 3 bundles of rice.] This is the amount of rice you have saved. September taxes bring in more, less stipends. Food at least equal to the number of men you have is necessary for properly provisioning for war. If you run out of food, you automatically lose. Always try to have more food than men. Maximum of 999.

Land: [The green stalk of growing rice.] This is the level of development of your rice paddies. Improving this (2,1 - Build -> Clear land) increases the potential yield of your fall harvest. Typhoons or famines can reduce this value. Maximum of 999.

Flood: [The ripples of water.] The level of preventative measures taken against floods. This level impacts the damage done by typhoons and famines, and the amount of the fall harvest. Improving this (2,2 - Build -> Flood control) helps keep your fief from being the next Atlantis, though the value will be reduced by disasters. Maximum of 100.

Trade: [The abacus.] The level of prosperity. Increasing this (2,3 -> Build, Expand town) will increase the revenue from March taxation and improve the likelihood of merchant visits. Disasters and war will decrease this value. Maximum of 999.

Culture: [The fan with the Japanese flag (rising sun).] "The level of advancement or civilization in a Fief. Culture relates directly to Trade. Samurai training works most efficiently in Fiefs where Culture is high." {2} Maximum of 999.

Happiness: [The farmer with the hoe.] The level of popular support you have. The lower this is, the less tax you gather in the spring and fall, and the more likely an uprising becomes. Your people will become unhappy when you draft men into your armies (8,1 - War -> Hire soldiers) and when you tax their labors too heavily. You can improve their disposition by lowering taxes and improving their fief (any Build command other than Fortify castle). Maximum of 100.

Population: [The family of three huddled together.] How many residents there are. This affects how many soldiers you can hire at one time. Population increases every March, but will decrease after every draft and epidemic. Maximum of 9999.

Castle: [The castle.] How well fortified your castle's defenses are. Increasing this (2,4 -> Build, Fortify castle) is the only Build command that does not make your people happier.

Men: [The soldier with the sword and red outfit.] This is the total number of soldiers available to defend the fief or go to war, under the command of your daimyo and/or samurai. You can have a maximum of 100 men per samurai.

Samurai: [The samurai in purple armor.] How many samurai are in your fief. This number includes your daimyo.

Debt: [The red bag with -$ on the front.] How much money you owe to the moneylender, to be automatically repaid in March. This will only show in the home fief of your daimyo, as only he can borrow money. All other fiefs will show ---.

{1} - Source: Koei, quoted without modification from the manual for the DOS version of Nobunaga's Ambition II. While the gameplay and interface may be somewhat different (from what I can see in the manual), the general purpose of both versions of the game is identical, and who better to explain the purpose of a game than its creators? I couldn't summarize it much better than they have.

{2} - Source: Koei again. While I could see the impact of improving trade on this value, it is not something over which you have direct control, so I felt ill-equipped to speak to its true purpose.

A few comments for anyone considering emailing me:

- I haven't played the PC version of this game (yet), so if you're looking for help with something that is different from the information featured here, I may not be able to help you. I DO intend on playing the PC version of Nobunaga's Ambition II, and will update or submit a modified version of this guide appropriate for PC gamers when I can. I'm going to be a college student soon, so "when I can" should be interpreted loosely and generously.
- I will welcome CONSTRUCTIVE feedback. If you just want to insult me, you'll be blocked as spam.
- I'm a bit of a stickler for spelling and grammar, but spellchecking hundreds of Japanese names made even my eyes glaze over. If you find an error, please let me know.

Now, if you:

- have a question about the game (at least until I complete my guide),
- have found an error and would like to let me know,

OR

- would like to use some of my material in a guide of your own/on your website (assuming you meet the criteria included in the Copyright Notice)

then just email me with Nobunaga's Ambition II in the subject line. I'll try to respond in a timely fashion, but don't expect an immediate response, or get impatient and send the same question over and over until you get a response. Nagging is liable to result in your emails being handled as spam.
