VERSION HISTORY I have got just about all of the FAQ completed. There may Version 1.00 be some more updates in the future. Saturday, January 24, 2004 Last Updated: GAME BASICS •------Objective: In Enduro your goal is to get past a certain amount of cars in the time span of one day, you have from sunrise to sunrise to complete the task. C O N T R O L S | Action Button | Gas | The action button is used as the gas of the car | -| the longer that you hold it down, the faster $\bar{\ \ }$ | that you will go. So be careful how long you are | $^-$ | holding it. Joystick | Steer | The left and right directions on the joystick | $\overline{}$ | will determine which way your car is going to go | $\overline{}$ | Please tell me you could figure this out on your | -| own! It would be sad if you didn't - really sad. | M O D E S P L A Y This is the only mode of play. The game is only one One Player - Normal player. However, if you are able to complete the goal for total number of cars past, you will continue onto the next level where you must start over again. L E V E L S Level One This is the easiest level of the game. All you have to do is get past a total of 200 cars and you will get past the level. The traffic is, for the most part, easy to pass and you should have no problem getting past this level. Level Two The second level of the game steps up your total to 300 cars.

Which makes the game suprisingly more difficult, but still very beatable. This is the first time you might need to worry about not hitting cars in order to beat the level. After two or three tries you should have this level down. The traffic actually seems to help you more often than not. They tend to come in groups and stay on one side of the raod.

Level Three

This is where you will really need some skill to begin beating levels. The total has been uped again to 400 cars and the traffic has become much more of a hazard. You will really need your instincts and a good reaction time to get past this level. You will need to keep a fast pace for much of the race.

Level Four

Once again, this round is even harder than the last. In fact, I have only beaten it a handfull of times. All I can really say is good luck and just keep on trying.

| I V STRATEGY |

Don't Get Into Accidents!

The absolute worst thing that you can do in Enduro is to get into a large amount of traffic accidents. Every time you get in an accident, not only do you slow down to a complete stop and have to pick up your speed all over again, but the previous four or five cars that you have passed will get by you, making the task even harder. Each crash will slow you down a good seven to ten seconds of race time, which is detrimental in the later levels.

If You Must - Gaurdrail

When you are racing, there will be times when it is inevitable that you are going to have to hit something. You are either going to have to hit a car, which sends you flying out of control and destroys your momentum, or you can hit the gaurdrail. The gaurdrail will slow you down quite a bit, but you still have full control over your car and it is extemely rare that anyone will be able to pass you. You will only loose three to five seconds off of your time. So if it comes down to the point where you must hit something, hit the gaurdrail.

Find a Good Speed

The controls are set up in a way that if you hold down the action button then your car will constantly accellerate. This means you can get your car going at a tremendous pace. However, the faster that you go, the less time that you will have to react and the less control you have over your car. This means that you wil not want to constantly hold down the action button because eventually you will get into really bad wrecks. Similarly, you do not want to go too slowly because you will not have enough speed to get past the other racers. The best thing to do, is find a pace that is good for you - one that is fast, that you must remain vigilant to get past cars, but you can still get past them. The pace is hard to find at first, but once you do - you can go through entire levels without ever worrying about your speed or hitting anything.

Early Bird Gets the Worm

It is a good idea to get past as many cars earlier in the level as possible. This is true for two reasons. One: During the middle of the race, it gets very dark and hard to see the cars and track in front of you. So you will probably have to slow down in order to do better. Two: Towards the end of the race, cars come in packs and you can get some good numbers racked up then, but generally it will never be enough, and every car you pass in the beginning gives you an extra buffer where you can make a mistake or slow down if needed. Ideally you will want to have the goal for cars beaten before dawn or during the sunrise hours.
